USEPA has also developed a geographic information site on the Internet where consumers can get information about drinking water, including their local drinking water supply. Visit <http://www.epa.gov/safewater/dwinfo.htm> to find links to Consumer Confidence Reports, state drinking water pages, including source water assessment program plans, violations data for individual water systems, and other data which EPA will use to help in setting future standards (including occurrence of regulated and currently unregulated contaminants, as well as microbes and disinfection byproducts).

USEPA's Safewater Web Site

<http://www.epa.gov/safewater> can provide you with more information on the Safe Drinking Water Act, on individual water systems, on contaminants that could occur in drinking water, and on actions you can take to help protect the sources of your drinking water.

USEPA's Safe Drinking Water Hotline

1-800-426-4791 or 1-877-EPA-WATER

can answer questions about drinking water and provide referrals for more information. The Hotline can also tell you whom to contact in your state, give you a list of upcoming EPA public meetings and documents open for comment, and can take your orders for EPA publications. You can also submit questions to the Hotline by sending an e-mail to hotline-sdwa@epa.gov
